Directors Duties in Australia
Introduction

Australian law imposes numerous duties and obligations on directors of an Australian company. These duties range from common law and statutory duties to act in the best interests of the company to more specific obligations such as financial reporting and disclosure requirements and managing climate change and cyber security risk.

This Guide covers the principal duties of directors of Australian companies, as well as other key obligations such as in relation to company meetings, insider trading, corporate governance, insurance and indemnities and other sources of liability (including anti-bribery and corruption, taxation and environmental and anti-discrimination laws).

Being a trusted adviser to many of the top companies in Australia, Baker McKenzie is recognised for its extensive experience advising directors of Australian companies.

This Guide provides you with a broad overview of the duties of directors of Australian companies. It is not intended, however, to be an exhaustive analysis of all relevant legal requirements. If you are uncertain about any of the issues raised in this Guide or require further details or assistance, please do not hesitate to contact us.

PARTNER CONTACTS
Contents

1. Position as a director ................................................................. 1
2. Directors' duties ...................................................................... 4
3. Delegation and reliance on others ............................................ 11
4. Financial reporting .................................................................... 12
5. Company meetings ................................................................... 15
6. Continuous disclosure ............................................................... 15
7. Restricted benefits .................................................................... 16
8. Financial assistance .................................................................. 18
9. Directors' bonuses ..................................................................... 18
10. Insider trading ........................................................................ 18
11. Whistleblower protections ....................................................... 19
12. Climate change risk ................................................................. 19
13. Cyber security risk .................................................................. 20
14. Contraventions ....................................................................... 21
15. Corporate governance ........................................................... 23
16. Directors' insurance and indemnities ...................................... 24
17. Other sources of liability ......................................................... 24

This Guide is current as at 1 July 2022 unless indicated otherwise.

All dollar amounts stated in this Guide are Australian dollars.

©2022 Baker & McKenzie. All rights reserved.

This communication has been prepared for the general information of clients and/or professional associates of Baker & McKenzie. You should not rely on the contents. It is not legal advice and should not be regarded as a substitute for legal advice. To the fullest extent allowed by law, Baker & McKenzie excludes all liability (whether arising in contract, for negligence or otherwise) in respect of all and each part of this Guide, including without limitation, any errors or omissions.

Baker & McKenzie, an Australian Partnership, is a member firm of Baker & McKenzie International, a global law firm with member law firms around the world. In accordance with the common terminology used in professional service organisations, reference to a "partner" means a person who is a partner, or equivalent, in such a law firm. Similarly, reference to an "office" means an office of any such law firm. This may qualify as "Attorney Advertising" requiring notice in some jurisdictions. Prior results do not guarantee similar outcomes.

About Baker McKenzie Australia

Baker McKenzie is unique among Australian law firms in our ability to deliver the knowledge, experience and capabilities of our global network to our clients in the local market. Companies benchmark themselves against the best practice in their sectors, globally, not just domestically. We provide our clients with the innovative legal solutions they expect from the global top-tier law firm, together with commercial pragmatism and seasoned experience as leaders in Australia. Baker McKenzie has been an integral part of the Australian legal landscape since 1964.
1. Position as a director

1.1 Appointment of directors

A proprietary company must have at least one director. At least one director of a proprietary company must ordinarily reside in Australia.1

A public company must have at least three directors. At least two directors of a public company must ordinarily reside in Australia.

Only an individual (i.e. a natural person) who is at least 18 years of age may be appointed as a director. A person must give written consent to act as a director of a company before being appointed.

Directors may be appointed by the members of the company in a general meeting or by the other directors in a board meeting. Directors leave office if they resign, retire, are removed in accordance with the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) (Corporations Act) and/or the company’s constitution, or are disqualified from managing companies.

Certain personal details of a director, such as their full name, date and place of birth and usual residential address, must be notified to the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) shortly after the director is appointed. These details then become publicly available.

Also, each director of an Australian company is required to verify their identity by holding or applying for a unique director identification number. For further details, see “Director identification number regime” in section 1.7 below.

Notification must also be made to ASIC if a director ceases acting as a director within 28 days of the date that the person ceased acting as a director. If a director’s resignation is not notified to ASIC within 28 days, the resignation is not effective until the date that ASIC is notified. Also, a director’s resignation or a resolution of members of a proprietary company to remove a director, is generally not effective if the company does not have at least one other director remaining at the end of the day the resignation or resolution (as applicable) is to take effect.

1.2 Alternate directors

A director may generally appoint an alternate to exercise some or all of the director’s powers for a specified period (for example, to attend and vote at board meetings when the director is unable to attend). The method of appointment and powers of alternate directors are usually set out in the constitution of the company. A person acting as an alternate director is subject to the same duties and liabilities as other directors. The appointment and removal of an alternate director must be notified to ASIC.

1.3 De facto and shadow directors

A person may be deemed to be a director of a company (even if they have not validly been appointed as a director) if:

- they act in the position of a director (de facto director); or
- the directors of the company are accustomed to act in accordance with the person’s instructions or wishes (shadow director).

---

1 If a proprietary company wishes to raise capital through equity crowd-sourced funding (CSF), it will be subject to Australia’s CSF regime which requires, amongst other things, that the company have at least two directors. If the company has two directors, one of the directors must be ordinarily resident in Australia. If the company has more than two directors, a majority of the directors must be ordinarily resident in Australia.
Determining whether or not a person is a de facto or shadow director will be based on the control and influence they have over the company's affairs, including considering the duties performed by that person in the context of the particular company. However, a person will not be considered to be a de facto or shadow director merely because the directors of a company act on advice given by the person in a professional advisory capacity (for example, an accountant or lawyer), or the person's business relationship with the directors or the company.

A person acting as a de facto director or shadow director is subject to the same duties and liabilities as a formally appointed director.

1.4 Functions of the board of directors

The board's functions depend on the circumstances of the company and may include to:

- appoint and reward the company's chief executive;
- set goals, formulate strategies and approve business plans for the company;
- approve annual budgets and key management decisions (such as decisions on major capital expenditure, business acquisitions, restructuring and refinancing);
- monitor management performance and business results;
- set and review policies for member communication and provide reports to members;
- set and review budgetary control and conformance strategies; and
- monitor the company's corporate governance practices.

Although the directors of a company act collectively as a board, each director is individually subject to statutory and common law duties, including to act in good faith in the best interests of the company and with reasonable care and diligence.

1.5 The constitution

A company's internal management may be governed by the replaceable rules in the Corporations Act, by a constitution or by a combination of both.

It is common for a company to have a constitution. The constitution sets out rules by which the company is governed and regulates the relationships between the company, its officers and members. The constitution may include, amend or displace the replaceable rules in the Corporations Act.

The constitution typically includes provisions regarding:

- the share capital of the company, including procedures for issuing and transferring shares in the company;
- powers, rights and duties of members;
- appointment of officers and their powers; and
- the winding up of the company.

A company's constitution (if any) and any replaceable rules that apply to the company operate as a statutory contract that is binding on the company, each member and each director and secretary.
1.6 Responsibilities of individual directors

On a board of directors, individual directors may have distinct responsibilities to the company, depending on the nature of their particular role within the company.

Executive and non-executive directors

If there are executive and non-executive directors on a board, the executive directors will usually have greater responsibilities than the non-executive directors. The distinction between executive and non-executive responsibilities is reflected in the different standards of care applied to individual directors - a higher standard of care will apply to executive directors (see section 2.5 below).

Managing directors

The board of directors can also choose to appoint a managing director to assume responsibility for the day-to-day management of the company. Where an individual director on a board would not have the ostensible authority to act alone on behalf of the company, a managing director may be empowered to act in a way akin to the board acting as a whole.

1.7 Director identification regime

Each director of an Australian company (including registered Australian bodies and registered foreign companies) is required to hold or apply for a unique identifier known as a "director identification number" (director ID). A director ID will be permanently assigned to each director, regardless of what company or companies they may be involved with over time, and will remain on record even if they cease being a director.

The aim of the director ID regime is to better track directors and their relationships between individuals and entities, in an effort to identify high-risk individuals and crack down on illegal activities such as phoenixing.

Under the director ID regime, directors appointed:

- on or before 31 October 2021 must apply for a director ID before 30 November 2022;²
- between 1 November 2021 and 4 April 2022 must apply for a director ID within 28 days of their appointment; and
- on and from 5 April 2022 must apply for a director ID before their appointment.³

Directors must apply for their own director ID (as they need to verify their own identity). There is no application cost.

The potential penalties for breaching the director ID requirements are:

- $1.1 million (civil penalty) or $13,200 (criminal penalty), for failing to hold a director ID when required to do so; and
- $1.1 million (civil penalty) or $26,640, one year imprisonment or both (criminal penalty), for applying for additional director IDs or misrepresenting a director ID.

² Directors appointed on or before 31 October 2021 have until 30 November 2022 to apply for a director ID (even if they subsequently become a director of another company after 31 October 2021).
³ For directors under the Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act 2006 (Cth) (i.e. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander persons and members of an Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander corporation), those appointed on or before 31 October 2022 have until 30 November 2023 to apply for a director ID. For such directors appointed from 1 November 2022, they must apply for a director ID before their appointment.
2. Directors' duties

2.1 Who the duties are owed to

Directors must act for the benefit of "the company as a whole". In general, this means that directors must act in the interests of all members collectively. However, directors may sometimes be required or permitted to take other interests into account.4

Individual members

In general, directors do not owe duties directly to individual members. However, in specific circumstances, a director may be found to owe a duty to an individual member. For example, a director acting as a proxy for a member at a meeting owes a duty to that member to vote according to their wishes.

Creditors

In addition to the duty to prevent insolvent trading (see section 2.7 below), directors may sometimes be required to take into account the interests of creditors, particularly where the company is insolvent or approaching insolvency. The Corporations Act also requires creditors' interests to be considered in specific circumstances (for example, where the company is proposing a capital reduction or share buy-back).

Employees

Directors do not owe any general duty to employees of the company. However, directors may breach their duties to the company if their actions cause the company to breach its obligations to employees. Directors (and others) are also prohibited from entering into agreements or transactions that are intended to avoid paying employee entitlements. If the company is being wound up, a person who contravenes this prohibition is liable to compensate employees for their loss.

Corporate groups

Subject to the special case of wholly-owned subsidiaries outlined below, a director of a company owes duties to that company, and not to any related companies or any member who appointed the director. A director breaches their duty if they enter into a transaction or make a decision in the interests of a related company or appointing member if it is not also in the best interests of their company.

Wholly-owned subsidiaries

A director of a company that is a wholly-owned subsidiary of a holding company is taken to act in good faith in the best interests of the subsidiary if:

- the constitution of the subsidiary expressly authorises the director to act in the best interests of the holding company;
- the director acts in good faith in the best interests of the holding company; and
- the subsidiary is not insolvent at that time and does not become insolvent because of the director’s act.

---

4 The extent to which directors owe a fiduciary duty to consider the interests of stakeholders other than members as a whole (such as individual members, creditors and employees), may be affected by the impact of COVID-19 on the company. Directors are required to be proactive in understanding the risks and opportunities that the current economic situation presents to their company, particularly if the company is in financial distress. In relation to the impact of COVID-19 on directors’ duties, ASIC Commissioner John Price has stated that “…directors and officers will need to carefully reflect on their fundamental duties to act with due care, skill and diligence and to act in the best interests of the company. This will include reflection on which stakeholders’ interests need to be factored into decisions – including employees, investors and creditors.” (see further: ASIC: Directors duties in context of COVID-19)
However, a director of a wholly-owned subsidiary must not disregard the subsidiary’s interests entirely, and failure to identify and take into account the consequences of their actions for the subsidiary may amount to a breach of their duty of care and diligence.

2.2 Overview of directors’ duties

The directors of a company are, subject to its constitution, responsible for the overall management of the company. In performing their role, directors are subject to a range of duties and obligations under the Corporations Act, the common law and the company’s constitution (if it has one).

The key duties of directors are to:

- act in good faith in the best interests of the company;
- exercise their powers for the purposes for which they were conferred;
- act with reasonable care and diligence;
- avoid conflicts of interest; and
- not improperly use company information or their position to gain an advantage for themselves or someone else or to cause detriment to the company.

This Guide deals with the duties of directors, but similar duties apply to all company officers, including secretaries.

A director may rely on certain information or advice given by certain people, provided the reliance was made in good faith and after making an independent assessment of the information or advice.

Unless the company’s constitution provides otherwise, the directors may delegate any of their powers to others, and are not responsible for a delegate’s exercise of power if the delegation satisfies a test of reasonableness (see section 3 below).

A director who breaches any of their duties is liable to civil penalties. If the breach is reckless or dishonest, the director may also incur criminal penalties (see further, section 14 below).

Stepping stone liability

A director who unreasonably exposes their company to sanctions, civil liability or reputational damage by allowing the company to contravene the Corporations Act or another law, even if acting in accordance with the wishes of members, may be liable for a breach of their statutory duty of care to the company. Any contravention of these duties may give rise to both civil penalties and disqualification as a director.

This approach is known as “stepping stone liability” - essentially, depending on the responsibilities and degree of control a director has over the company and the particular circumstances of the company, the Court may find secondary personal liability on the part of a director for allowing a primary breach by the company. Further, members of the company cannot sanction, ratify or approve any such contravention by a director. Accordingly, although section 180 of the Corporations Act does not impose strict liability on directors for breaches of the Corporations Act or other laws, directors must exercise reasonable care and take precautions to avoid foreseeable risks of harm to the company and its members.

2.3 Duty of good faith

Directors must exercise their powers and discharge their duties in good faith in the best interests of the company as a whole.

\[5 \text{ Cassimatis v Australian Securities and Investments Commission [2020] FCAFC 52.}\]
At a minimum, this duty requires directors to act in what they honestly believe to be the company’s best interests. In addition, a director’s conduct may be assessed objectively by reference to what a reasonable director would consider to be the company’s best interests.

2.4 Duty to act for a proper purpose

Directors must exercise their powers and discharge their duties for a proper purpose.

The company's constitution may specify the proper purposes of a power, otherwise the proper purposes must be determined based on the particular circumstances and the usual function of such a power. For example, one proper purpose of the power to issue shares is to raise capital. By contrast, issuing shares for the substantial purpose of diluting an existing member's voting power, is likely to be an improper exercise of the power.

It is not sufficient that a director honestly believes their actions are for a proper purpose if a court considers that purpose to be improper.

A director may have exercised a power for both improper and proper purposes. If the director would not have exercised the power “but for” an improper purpose, they may be found to have breached this duty.

2.5 Duty of care and diligence

A director must exercise their powers and discharge their duties with the degree of care and diligence that a reasonable person would exercise if they:

- were a director of a company in the same circumstances; and
- occupied the same office and had the same responsibilities within the company as the director.

The conduct required to satisfy this duty depends on the company’s circumstances and the particular director’s position and responsibilities. Executive directors, and other directors with special skills or experience, are held to a higher standard. For example, a finance director who is insufficiently diligent in relation to financial matters may breach this duty even though identical conduct by a non-executive director may not constitute a breach. Similarly, any special responsibilities held by the chair of the board may affect the scope of their duty of care.

However, a director’s conduct will not necessarily be excused due to a lack of skills or experience. All directors are required to meet a minimum objective standard. For example, all directors are expected to take reasonable steps to be in a position to guide and monitor the management of the company.

This is likely to mean that directors should not be absent from board meetings without good reason. All directors must also have sufficient financial literacy at least to understand the company's financial position and any financial statements the company is required to prepare.

Business judgment rule

A director who makes a "business judgment" is taken to satisfy their duty of care and diligence in respect of the judgment if they:

- make the judgment in good faith for a proper purpose;
- do not have a material personal interest in the subject matter of the judgment;
- inform themselves about the subject matter of the judgment to the extent they reasonably believe to be appropriate; and
- rationally believe that the judgment is in the best interests of the company.
A "business judgment" is any decision to take or not to take action with respect to a matter relevant to the business operations of the company. For example, decisions to enter into transactions and matters of planning and forecasting are likely to constitute "business judgments", but not the mere performance of directors' oversight responsibilities.

To benefit from the rule, a director must make a conscious and informed decision, even if it is a decision not to take action. A director who simply fails to turn their mind to a matter has not made a business judgment and is not protected by the rule.

This statutory business judgment rule provides a defence in relation to the duty of care and diligence only. It does not apply in relation to a director's other duties (although a court may still be reluctant to review a director's business judgments). The rule also does not apply to other potential liabilities of directors, including liability for misstatement in a prospectus or takeover document, insolvent trading or misleading or deceptive conduct.

2.6 Duty to avoid conflicts of interest

Directors must not place themselves in a position where there is an actual conflict, or a real possibility of conflict, between their duties to the company and a personal interest or duty owed elsewhere (for example, to another company).

It is not necessary for the company to suffer any detriment or the director to obtain any advantage in order for this duty to be breached.

The exact scope of the duty, and the steps required to avoid a breach, may be affected by the company's constitution, as discussed below. A general requirement, depending on the nature of the director's interest or other duty, is disclosure to the company.

Disclosure of interest and other procedural requirements

A director who has a material personal interest in a matter that relates to the affairs of the company must give the other directors notice of the interest, unless an exception applies (for example, the interest relates to a proposed contract that is subject to approval by members). The notice must provide details of the nature and extent of the interest and its relation to the company's affairs, and must be given at a directors' meeting as soon as practicable after the director becomes aware of their interest in the matter. Standing notice of the interest may also be given.

In addition, a director of a public company who is required to disclose such an interest may not be present at a directors' meeting while the relevant matter is being considered and may not vote on the matter, unless the disinterested directors resolve that the interest should not disqualify the director. The same restriction usually does not apply to directors of a proprietary company, depending on its constitution and the particular circumstances. However, even where a director is permitted to vote on a matter in which they are interested, they must do so with regard to the best interests of the company.

The constitution of the company, whether public or proprietary, may also impose additional restrictions regarding directors' interests or requirements regarding disclosure of interests and other procedures to be complied with by interested directors.

Dealing with the company

The duty to avoid conflicts of interest may be breached where a director enters into, or otherwise has a personal interest in, a contract or other transaction with the company, or is a director of two companies that are transacting with each other.

If the director breaches the duty (for example, by not complying with disclosure and other requirements), the company may be entitled to avoid the transaction and the director may be liable to compensate the company for any loss it suffers or account to the company for any profit made by the director.
However, under the replaceable rules in the Corporations Act, if the director of a proprietary company complies with the requirement to disclose any personal interest before a transaction is entered into, the director may retain benefits under the transaction and the company cannot avoid the transaction merely because of the director's interest. Even if a proprietary company's constitution displaces this rule, it will typically contain a provision with similar effect.

Nevertheless, an interested director is not entitled to deal freely with the company merely because they disclose their personal interest. The director must continue to satisfy all of their duties, particularly the duties to act in the company's best interests and with care and diligence. In some circumstances, those other duties may oblige an interested director to take additional action to protect the company's interests, such as disclosing further information about the transaction or actively attempting to prevent a transaction that is not in the company's interests.

Additional restrictions apply to dealings between a public company and its directors – see section 7.1 below.

Appropriation of corporate opportunities

A director must not appropriate, or divert to another person, a business opportunity which the company is considering or pursuing, or which the company could reasonably be expected to have an interest in.

A director who breaches this rule is liable to account to the company for any profit made by the director, even if the transaction was fair to the company or the company was unable to exploit the opportunity itself or unlikely to have made the profit in question.

Misuse of position or information

Overlapping with the preceding general rule, directors have a statutory duty not to improperly use their position, or information obtained by virtue of their position, to gain an advantage for themselves or someone else or to cause detriment to the company.

Such conduct is “improper” if it breaches the standards of conduct that would reasonably be expected of a person in the director's position, regardless of whether the director considers it improper.

The duty not to misuse company information continues to apply after a person ceases to be a director, provided that the person obtained the information while they were a director. The duty not to misuse company information can apply to information which is not confidential. A general duty of confidence also applies in relation to information which is confidential.

Authorisation by members

If a director has fully disclosed a personal interest or other duty, the members may authorise the director to act in what would otherwise be a breach of the above conflict rules or ratify a past breach by the director, unless the company's constitution provides otherwise.

For example, fully informed members may authorise a director to enter into a transaction with the company or to exploit an opportunity that the company does not wish to exploit.

Such authorisation or ratification typically cannot be provided by the disinterested directors unless the constitution gives them that power.

Neither the members nor the disinterested directors are able to authorise or ratify a breach of a director's statutory duties (including the duties to act in the company's best interests and for a proper purpose), so an interested director must continue to satisfy those duties even if a potential conflict has been waived. However, in the case of a director's statutory duties not to "improperly" use their position or information, an appropriate approval may have the effect of removing any impropriety so that the duty is not breached.
2.7 Duty to prevent insolvent trading

Insolvency

A company is insolvent if it is not able to pay all of its debts, as and when they become due and payable. This is predominantly a cash flow rather than a balance sheet test, requiring an assessment of whether the company's anticipated current and future cash flows will be sufficient to enable its current and future liabilities to be paid when due.

However, the company's overall financial position may also be considered, having regard to commercial realities. For example, a temporary lack of liquidity or cash reserves may not constitute insolvency if the company is able to realise assets or raise funding in a timely manner.

Duty to prevent insolvent trading

Directors have a duty to prevent the company from trading while insolvent. A director breaches this duty if:

- the director fails to prevent the company from incurring a debt;
- the director is aware that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the company is insolvent or would become insolvent by incurring the debt, or a reasonable person in the circumstances would be so aware; and
- the company is insolvent or becomes insolvent by incurring the debt.

A debt may be incurred not only by incurring a liability in the course of trading but also, for example, by declaring or paying a dividend or making a capital reduction.

A director who breaches this duty may be ordered by a court to pay a civil penalty and/or to pay to the company, its liquidator or the relevant creditor compensation equal to the amount of loss suffered by the creditor. In addition, a director who breaches this duty dishonestly may incur criminal penalties.

Defences

It is a defence to a civil claim for insolvent trading if:

- the director had reasonable grounds to expect, and did expect, that the company was solvent and would remain solvent even if it incurred the debt;
- the director reasonably relied on a competent and reliable person to provide adequate information about the company's solvency and, on the basis of that information, expected that the company was and would remain solvent;
- the director took all reasonable steps to prevent the company from incurring the debt; or
- due to illness or for some other good reason, the director did not take part in the management of the company when the debt was incurred.

Safe harbour

Directors have the protection of a legislative carve-out from the duty to prevent insolvent trading. Specifically, directors of financially distressed companies are protected in relation to debts that the company incurs in connection with developing and taking a course of action that is reasonably likely to lead to a better outcome for the company, than proceeding immediately to voluntary administration or winding up.

This safe harbour applies from the time the director starts developing a course of action until:

- the end of a reasonable period of time if the director fails to take the course of action within that reasonable period of time;
the director stops taking the course of action;
the course of action stops being reasonably likely to lead to a better outcome for the company; or the company goes into administration or liquidation.

Directors will not be able to rely on the safe harbour if the company is not meeting its obligations in relation to employee entitlements or its taxation reporting obligations.

Further, in order to have the protection of the safe harbour, directors bear the burden of adducing or pointing to evidence that suggests a reasonable possibility that they have been acting under the safe harbour.

Bearing the evidential burden in mind, in order to ensure that the safe harbour applies, directors should:

- obtain ongoing legal and financial advice as soon as they suspect insolvency or a risk of insolvency;
- obtain ongoing advice from a sufficiently briefed and appropriately qualified turnaround or restructuring professional;
- formulate a detailed turnaround plan that addresses operational, strategic and financial issues, including proposed courses of action; and
- carefully document the steps taken in implementing the turnaround plan through board minutes and file notes.

An independent review of the safe harbour provisions was conducted in 2021 and resulted in a number of recommendations aimed at simplifying and clarifying the wording of the provisions. In its response to the final report, the former government accepted a number of these recommendations, including the development of a best practice guide to safe harbour to assist directors with understanding their obligations. At this stage, it is unclear when any reforms will be enacted.

Simplified debt restructuring for small businesses

From 1 January 2021, eligible small businesses have been able to access a simplified debt restructuring process. This process allows directors to retain control of their company while it develops a plan to restructure its debts with the assistance of a restructuring practitioner. While the restructuring process is under way, directors are permitted to engage in transactions that are in the ordinary course of business (or otherwise with the consent of the restructuring practitioner or the leave of the Court) and are protected from liability for insolvent trading.

To be eligible for the new process, a company must meet certain criteria, including having total liabilities that do not exceed $1 million, resolving that it is in insolvency or likely to become insolvent and appointing a small business restructuring practitioner to oversee the process. To put the plan to creditors, the company must also have paid all its employee entitlements and lodged all its tax returns, notices and statements.

The restructuring process involves the directors developing a restructuring plan detailing how the company’s creditors would be repaid if the plan were made, which must be put to those creditors within 20 business days of entering the process (unless extended by the restructuring practitioner). The creditors then have generally 15 business days to accept or reject the proposed plan. The plan will be accepted if more than 50% of the creditors (by value) vote in its favour. If the plan is not accepted, the directors will remain in control of the company, but are no longer protected from liability for insolvent trading.

---

6 Review of the Insolvent Trading Safe Harbour Report
7 Government Response to the Review of the Insolvent Trading Safe Harbour
2.8 Responsibility for administrative obligations

A company's secretary is responsible for ensuring that the company complies with certain requirements under the Corporations Act, such as the requirements to have a registered office and to notify ASIC of certain details. If a proprietary company does not have a secretary, each director is instead responsible for any contravention of such requirements, unless the director took reasonable steps to ensure the company's compliance.

2.9 Liabilities of corporate trustees

If a company which acts as trustee:

- incurs a liability which it cannot discharge; and
- is not entitled to be indemnified by the trust against that liability due to the terms of the trust or because the company committed a breach of trust or acted outside the scope of the trust, the directors are jointly and severally liable to discharge the trustee company's liability (unless any particular director is held responsible).

3. Delegation and reliance on others

3.1 Delegation

Unless the company's constitution provides otherwise, the directors of a company may collectively (but not individually) delegate any of their powers to a committee of directors, an individual director, an employee of the company or any other person.

The appointed delegate must exercise the powers delegated in accordance with the directions of the directors. Any exercise of power by the delegate is as effective as if the directors themselves had exercised it. However, each director remains responsible for the exercise of the power by the delegate unless the director believed, on reasonable grounds:

- that the delegate would exercise the power in conformity with the duties imposed on directors by the Corporations Act and the company's constitution; and
- in good faith and after making proper inquiry, that the delegate was reliable and competent in relation to the power delegated.

3.2 Non-delegable powers and responsibilities

Irrespective of the above, there are certain powers and responsibilities of directors that cannot be delegated, and must be exercised by directors themselves. Some of the non-delegable powers and responsibilities include:

- becoming and remaining familiar with the operations and business fundamentals of the company;
- monitoring and remaining informed as to the company's operations (for example, by regularly attending board meetings and making inquiries as to the company's operations);
- maintaining a reasonably informed opinion of the financial status and solvency of the company;
- understanding the company's financial status including, at minimum, having a basic understanding of financial statements and the general accounting standards applicable to the company; and
- approving the company’s financial statements.
Also, directors have an obligation to generally supervise and remain informed of a delegate’s use of any delegated powers and responsibilities, including applying the director’s own knowledge to information provided to the director by that delegate.

3.3 Reliance on information or advice

In certain circumstances, a director is entitled to rely on information or professional or expert advice given or prepared by:

- an employee of the company whom the director reasonably believes to be reliable and competent in relation to the relevant matters;
- a professional adviser or expert if the director reasonably believes that the relevant matters are within that person’s professional or expert competence;
- another director or officer in relation to matters within that person’s authority; or
- a committee of directors on which the director did not serve in relation to matters within the committee’s authority.

A director’s reliance on such information or advice is presumed to be reasonable if the reliance was made in good faith and after the director made an independent assessment of the information or advice (having regard to the director’s knowledge of the company and the complexity of the structure and operations of the company).

That is, directors must bring an independent mind to bear when considering professional or expert advice, and must not simply accept the views of others. Also, directors should not automatically expect to be kept properly informed by senior management or others of all important matters relating to the company. Directors should not only exercise independent judgement on company matters, but also regularly engage with senior management and other key personnel in the company, to facilitate a healthy flow of information between the board and management (see further, section 15 below).

4. Financial reporting

4.1 Financial records

All companies are required to keep written financial records and retain them for at least seven years after the transactions covered by the records are completed.

The financial records must correctly record and explain the company’s transactions and financial position and performance and enable true and fair financial statements to be prepared and audited.

4.2 Reporting obligations

Directors must inform themselves of the reporting obligations of their company depending on its size and type. Public companies, disclosing entities, large proprietary companies and certain small proprietary companies are all required to prepare annual financial reports and directors’ reports.

The basic financial reporting requirements of these companies are, with limited exceptions, to:

- prepare an annual financial report and directors’ report;
- arrange for the financial report to be audited;
- send the financial report, directors’ report and auditor’s report to members;
lodge the financial report, directors’ report and auditor’s report with ASIC (or the Australian Securities Exchange (ASX) if the company is listed on ASX); and if the company is a public company, present the financial report, directors’ report and auditor’s report at the annual general meeting (AGM).

Disclosing entities (including listed companies and certain companies with 100 or more members) also have half-yearly reporting obligations, including to:

- prepare a half-yearly financial report and directors’ report and have the financial report audited or reviewed by an auditor and obtain an auditor’s report; and
- lodge the financial report, directors’ report and auditor’s report with ASIC (or ASX if the company is listed on ASX).

Companies listed on ASX have additional periodic reporting obligations under the ASX Listing Rules.

Proprietary companies that are subject to Australia’s crowd-sourced funding regime and have raised over $3 million must also have their financial statements audited.

4.3 Financial report

The financial report of a company for a financial year consists of:

- the financial statements for the year;
- notes to the financial statements; and
- a directors’ declaration about the statements and notes.

Financial statements and notes

The financial statements and notes must comply with Australia’s accounting standards issued by the Australian Accounting Standards Board (Accounting Standards), and must give a true and fair view of the financial position and performance of the company (or a consolidated group, if required by the Accounting Standards).

If a company is required to prepare a financial report, it is generally also required to have the report audited and obtain an auditor’s report.

Directors’ declaration

As part of the financial report, the directors of a company must make a declaration about the financial statements and notes. This declaration must be made in accordance with a resolution of the directors. It must also specify the date on which the declaration was made and be signed by a director.

The directors’ declaration must include declarations such as whether, in the directors’ opinion:

- there are reasonable grounds to believe that the company will be able to pay its debts as and when they become due and payable; and
- the financial statements and notes are in accordance with the Corporations Act, including that they:
  - comply with the Accounting Standards; and
  - give a true and fair view of the financial position and performance of the company.

The directors of a listed company must only make the directors’ declaration after each person who performs a chief executive function or a chief financial officer function has given the directors a declaration regarding the company’s financial records, financial statements and notes.
4.4 Directors’ report

The directors’ report for a financial year must include information such as:

- the names of the directors;
- a review of the company’s operations and the results of those operations;
- details of any significant changes in the company’s state of affairs;
- the company’s principal activities, and any significant changes in the nature of those activities;
- details of dividends paid, or recommended or declared but not paid;
- significant post-financial year matters, and likely developments in the company’s operations for future years;
- if the company’s operations are subject to any particular and significant environmental regulation, details of the entity’s performance in relation to environmental regulation; and
- indemnities given and insurances paid by the company for its officers and auditor.

The directors’ report for a listed company must include additional information such as:

- each director’s interests in shares and other securities of the company or a related company;
- directorships of other listed companies held by a director in the current or previous two financial years;
- information to enable an informed assessment of the company’s business strategies and prospects;
- details of amounts paid or payable to the company’s auditor for non-audit services; and
- a report on the remuneration of key management personnel, as discussed below.

Remuneration report

The remuneration report must include details of the remuneration of each member of the key management personnel of the company (or the consolidated group, if applicable), such as details of:

- the person’s short-term, long-term, termination and post-employment benefits;
- any performance conditions that apply to any part of the person’s remuneration;
- equity instruments, and options and rights over them, held or controlled by the person or a close family member of the person; and
- the duration, termination notice periods and termination payments under any contract of employment with the person.

At a listed company’s AGM, a resolution to adopt the remuneration report must be put to a vote of members (excluding key management personnel covered by the report and their closely related parties). This vote is advisory only and does not bind the directors or the company. However, if 25% of votes oppose adoption of the report at two consecutive AGMs, at the second AGM members may resolve to hold a “spill meeting” within 90 days at which they will vote to replace or re-appoint all directors (except for a managing director whose appointment is indefinite). If the company does not hold the spill meeting within 90 days, each director at that time commits an offence.

Further, at a listed company’s AGM, the chair must allow a reasonable opportunity for the members to ask questions about, or make comments on, the remuneration report.
4.5 Directors' obligations

Directors have an obligation to take all reasonable steps to comply with, or to secure compliance with, the financial record-keeping and reporting obligations set out in the Corporations Act. A director commits an offence if they breach this obligation dishonestly.

5. Company meetings

5.1 Member meetings

Member meetings provide opportunities for a company and its directors to provide information to members and agree key decisions. A public company must hold an AGM within 18 months of its incorporation and within 5 months of the end of its financial year. There is no requirement for a proprietary company to hold an AGM, but certain actions (such as changing the company’s name or its capital structure) are required to be approved by members.

Meetings of members can be called by a director or at the request of members with at least 5% of the votes that may be cast at the meeting. An unlisted company must give at least 21 days’ notice in advance of a meeting and a listed company must give at least 28 days’ notice in advance of a meeting, unless the constitution specifies a longer period of notice.

5.2 Director meetings

Meetings of directors are less regulated than member meetings. The rules applying to directors' meetings are typically contained in the company’s corporate documents, including the constitution and members agreement (if any). Some matters, such as resolutions required for key decisions and use of technology, may need to follow Corporations Act requirements.

5.3 Hybrid or virtual meetings

From 1 April 2022, permanent changes were made to the Corporations Act to permit companies to hold hybrid meetings and, if expressly provided by the company’s constitution, virtual-only meetings. The Corporations Act specifies particular requirements for companies to comply with if they convene and hold meetings using virtual technology. Generally, all meetings must allow members as a whole a reasonable opportunity to participate in the meeting. This includes, for example, holding the meeting at a reasonable time and allowing members to ask questions and make comments both orally and in writing.

6. Continuous disclosure

In addition to the periodic reporting obligations outlined in section 4 above, listed companies and other disclosing entities have continuous disclosure obligations under the Corporations Act and the ASX Listing Rules (as applicable).

An entity listed on ASX must immediately notify ASX of any information concerning the entity that would reasonably be expected to have a material effect on the price or value of its securities.

Civil and criminal penalties apply for non-compliance with the continuous disclosure requirements, and this liability extends to a director (or any other person) who is involved in a breach of these obligations (see further, section 14.2 below). However, a "due diligence" defence is available if the person took all reasonable steps to ensure that the entity complied with its continuous disclosure obligations and reasonably believed that the entity was complying.

From 14 August 2021, permanent changes were made to the continuous disclosure laws under the Corporations Act, heightening the bar for civil contraventions of these obligations. Under the changes:
listed entities and their directors will only be exposed to civil liability for continuous disclosure breaches if there has been “knowledge, recklessness or negligence” (Fault Test) in updating the market with price sensitive information; and

- the Fault Test must also be established for a breach under the misleading or deceptive conduct provisions of the Corporations Act and the Australian Securities and Investments Commission Act 2001 (Cth), meaning that a breach of continuous disclosure obligations will no longer automatically trigger misleading and deceptive conduct liability unless the Fault Test is proven.\(^8\)

This new standard will apply both in proceedings brought by ASIC and in private proceedings, such as member class actions.

The reforms do not, however, impact:

- the existing criminal offence for failing to comply with the continuous disclosure obligations under the ASX Listing Rules and the Corporations Act;

- liability for disclosing information to the market that is misleading or deceptive or if guidance or other forward-looking statements are made without reasonable grounds; or

- ASIC’s power to issue infringement notices to listed entities, imposing a penalty of up to $100,000, if ASIC has reasonable grounds to believe that an entity has failed to disclose non-public information that a reasonable person would consider materially price-sensitive, none of which require the Fault Test to be established.

The amended continuous disclosure provisions are permanent, however they are scheduled to be reviewed by an independent expert in 2024.

Unlisted disclosing entities must similarly notify ASIC as soon as possible of materially price-sensitive information that is not generally available (or follow ASIC’s published guidance regarding website disclosure). In both cases, there is a limited exception in relation to certain confidential information.

An entity listed on ASX must also disclose other specific information to ASX, such as the material terms of employment, service and consultancy agreements with directors or their related parties, and details of directors’ interests in securities of the entity or a related entity. If details of a director’s interests in securities are not disclosed to ASX by the entity, the director is personally obliged to notify ASX, and commits an offence if they fail to do so.

7. Restricted benefits

The duty to avoid conflicts of interest is supplemented by the following statutory restrictions on certain benefits that may be received by directors and others.

7.1 Financial benefits to related parties of public companies

For a public company, or an entity controlled by a public company, to give a financial benefit to a related party of the public company:

- the public company or controlled entity must obtain the approval of the public company’s members and give the benefit within 15 months after approval; or

---

\(^8\) A director who is found not to be liable for continuous disclosure breaches because the director did not actually know the information is price sensitive information may still breach their duty to act with reasonable care and diligence if they should have known the information is likely to be price sensitive information (see Australian Securities and Investments Commission v Blue Star Helium Limited (No 4) [2021] FCA 1578).
the giving of the benefit must fall within an exception under the Corporations Act (as outlined below).

"Giving a financial benefit" is to be interpreted broadly and includes arrangements that are indirect, informal or involve conferring a financial advantage rather than paying money. Examples include:

- providing a related party with finance or property;
- buying an asset from or selling an asset to a related party;
- leasing an asset from or to a related party;
- supplying services to or receiving services from a related party; and
- issuing securities or granting an option to a related party.

"Related parties" of a public company include:

- directors of the public company or an entity that controls the public company;
- the spouses of those directors and the parents and children of the directors or their spouses; and
- entities controlled by any of those people, at the relevant time, in the previous six months, or if likely in the future.

There are several exceptions to the requirement for member approval. For example if the financial benefit is:

- on arm's length terms;
- reasonable remuneration to an officer or employee of the public company or a related company;
- payment of expenses incurred by such an officer or employee in performing their duties; or
- no more than $5,000 in a financial year.

7.2 Payment for loss or retirement from office

A company (and its associates) must not give anyone a benefit in connection with a person's retirement or resignation from, or loss of, an office or position of employment in the company or a related company if:

- the office or position is a managerial or executive office; or
- the retiree has held a managerial or executive office in the company or a related company in the previous three years, unless certain member approvals are obtained. If this prohibition is contravened, the provider of the benefit and, in many cases, the recipient of the benefit both commit an offence.

For a listed company, a "managerial or executive office" is one held by a member of the key management personnel (being persons (including directors) who have authority and responsibility for planning, directing and controlling the activities of the company, directly or indirectly). For an unlisted company, "managerial or executive office" means the office of director or any other office or position held by a person who is also a director of the company or a related company.

The prohibition does not apply to certain benefits including:

- exempt benefits, such as certain deferred bonuses and redundancy payments; or
- benefits which are:
  - genuine payments by way of damages for breach of contract;
given under an agreement entered into before the person began to hold the office or position from which they are retiring; or payments by way of pension or lump sum for past services to the company or a related company, provided the total value of all benefits does not exceed the retiree's average annual base salary (pro rata if the person held the office or position for less than a year).

8. Financial assistance

A company is prohibited from financially assisting a person to acquire shares (or any right or interest in shares) in the company or a holding company of the company, unless:

- the assistance does not "materially prejudice" the company or its members or the company's ability to pay its creditors;
- the company follows certain procedures involving member approvals and lodging documents with ASIC (known as a "whitewash" procedure); or
- an exception applies, for example if the assistance is given under an employee share scheme approved by members.

Subject to certain exceptions, a company is also prohibited from acquiring shares in itself or taking security over shares in itself or in a company that controls it.

9. Directors' bonuses

If a director receives a benefit from the company which is "unreasonable" (i.e. uncommercial from the company's point of view), and a winding up of the company begins within the following four years, a court may order the director to return some or all of the benefit and/or pay the company a fair amount for some or all of the benefit (in addition to other possible orders).

This rule applies whether the benefit is a payment, company property, securities in the company or the right to such a benefit (such as an option over shares), and whether the benefit is given to a director, a close associate of a director or another person on behalf of a director or their close associates.

10. Insider trading

Insider trading by a director, or any other person, is an offence. Insider trading occurs where:

- a person possesses "inside information", i.e. information which is not generally available and which a reasonable person would expect to have a material effect on the price or value of particular securities (or certain other financial products) if it were generally available;
- the person knows or ought to know that the information is inside information; and
- the person trades in or agrees to trade in the relevant securities (or procures another person to do so).

If the securities are listed, it is also an offence if a person communicates inside information to another person and knows or ought to know that the other person would be likely to trade in the relevant securities.
Information which is generally available is not inside information. Generally available information includes readily observable matter, information likely to have come to the attention of persons who commonly invest in the relevant kind of securities, and inferences drawn from these two types of information.

Exceptions and defences

There are a number of exceptions and defences to the insider trading prohibitions, for example where:

- a director is obtaining a share qualification;
- communication of the relevant information is required by law;
- the person being prosecuted obtained the relevant information solely because it was made known in a manner that was likely to bring it to the attention of persons who commonly invest in the relevant kind of securities; or
- the other party to the transaction knew, or ought reasonably to have known, of the information before entering into the transaction.

11. Whistleblower protections

The Corporations Act protects corporate sector "whistleblowers" who make public interest disclosures by identifying and calling out potential misconduct of companies.

Directors, auditors and other senior people within companies must be aware of their obligations to protect whistleblowers, and those who fail to handle whistleblower reports correctly may be in breach of their Corporations Act obligations. Contravention of the whistleblower protections may result in criminal or civil penalties for any person found to be:

- causing or threatening to cause detriment to a whistleblower; or
- disclosing a whistleblower's identity or information likely to lead to their identification, unless that disclosure is authorised under the law.

Public companies, large proprietary companies and corporate trustees of superannuation entities regulated by the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) are also required to have compliant internal company policies to ensure that whistleblowers are appropriately protected and their complaints are heard. Such policies must include, amongst other things, information setting out the legal protections available to a whistleblowers, and how the company will investigate whistleblower disclosures and protect whistleblowers from detriment.

12. Climate change risk

With climate-related disclosure and "greenwashing" attracting attention recently, directors should be aware that these topics have become an area of increased corporate regulatory scrutiny in 2022.

ASIC Chair, Joe Longo, stated that ESG and climate-related disclosures by listed companies are a "core focus" of the Commission's 2022 corporate governance priorities.9 Additionally, the ACCC Chair pledged in March to "closely scrutinise businesses making environmental and sustainability claims, including claims about consumer goods, manufacturing, the energy sector, and carbon neutrality".10

ASIC defines "greenwashing" as the practice of misrepresenting the extent to which a financial product or investment strategy is environmentally friendly, sustainable or ethical. ASIC states that labels or statements about a product’s green credentials should not be misleading, emphasising that “being ‘true to label’ is not a nice-to-have, it’s a regulatory must have”. In their information sheet on how to avoid greenwashing, ASIC outlined a list of questions to consider and examples of misconduct which are particularly useful to directors in this space - notably the sheet sheds light on the importance of not using ambiguous or vague terminology or providing inadequate explanations. While the information sheet states that it “focuses on sustainability-related products issued by funds, its principles may apply to other entities that offer or promote financial products that take into account sustainability-related considerations”.\textsuperscript{11} Importantly, ASIC recognises the recommendations made by the Financial Stability Board’s Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures (TCFD), and encourages voluntary disclosure in accordance with the TCFD framework. They expect that anyone who follows the framework will be well placed in future.

Regulatory enforcement powers and remedies are extensive in Australia and include monetary penalties of up to $11.1 million for companies and $1.11 million for individuals. Criminal penalties for breaches of directors duties carry a penalty of up to 15 years imprisonment.

With recent extreme weather events confirming the reality of climate change, it is important that climate considerations and risk management are at the front of mind for every organisation. With this in mind, the Governance Institute of Australia have released a guide for management and boards on the path to net zero and outlining the key steps to achieving net zero. These include governance, strategy, expectations and reporting. The guide acts as a practical framework to assist senior managers and directors, and aims to do communicate the immediacy of climate change and its potential impact on companies.\textsuperscript{12}

13. Cyber security risk

Cyber security risk is another emerging area, with the Australian government considering implementing stronger cyber security regulation to support Australia’s growing digital economy and protect it from cyber security threats.

In July 2021, the former government released a discussion paper, \textit{Strengthening Australia’s cyber security regulations and incentives,} which sets out a number of proposed strategies, including the proposal to set minimum expectations for companies to manage cyber security risks.\textsuperscript{13} The discussion paper contemplates two potential governance standards:

- voluntary governance standards for larger companies which sets out the responsibilities (including that of directors) and processes for managing cyber security risks; and
- mandatory governance standards requiring larger companies to achieve compliance within a specific timeframe.

Whilst it is unclear when any proposed governance standard will be implemented, directors should be aware that consideration and management of cyber security risks may fall within the scope of their duty to act with reasonable care and diligence and in good faith in the best interests of the company.

Additionally, ASIC’s published best practice guidelines in relation to cyber resilience processes highlights the importance of board engagement in cybersecurity strategy and governance, suggesting that directors should:

- follow the advice of the Australian Cyber Securities Centre in identifying and managing cyber risks;
- reflect on risks relevant to the company’s business;
- take ownership of cyber strategy and ensure it is reviewed on a periodic basis;

\textsuperscript{11} ASIC’s How to avoid greenwashing when offering or promoting sustainability-related products
\textsuperscript{12} Guide for boards and management on the path to net zero
\textsuperscript{13} Strengthening Australia’s cyber security regulations and incentives: call for views recognise and ensure there are appropriate safeguards in place to manage cyber risks; and where appropriate, engage external experts to review and challenge the company’s cyber risk tolerance.\textsuperscript{14}

In a recent case, \textit{Australian Securities and Investments Commission v RI Advice Group Pty Ltd [2022] FCA 496}, the Federal Court found that the holder of an Australian financial services licence (AFSL) contravened the Corporations Act's requirements for a licensee to provide financial services ‘efficiently, honestly and fairly’ by failing to have adequate cyber security risk management systems in place to manage cyber security risks. The company was ordered to undertake a compliance program including engaging an external expert to assess the adequacy of its cyber security risk management systems and security training. Although this relates specifically to the company’s duties as an AFSL holder, the case highlights ASIC’s position regarding cyber security risk management, and may be extended to apply directly to directors’ duties.

There may also be additional cyber security and risk management obligations which will apply in regard to a company’s assets that are “critical infrastructure sector assets” under the \textit{Security of Critical Infrastructure Act 2018 (Cth)}, which was amended in 2021 and early 2022 and covers 11 industry sectors and 22 categories of critical infrastructure assets.

\textbf{14. Contraventions}

If a director contravenes any of their duties, or they fail to meet any of their obligations, proceedings may be brought against them. Proceedings can be brought by:

- the company;
- the company’s members;
- creditors, insolvency administrators or trustees in bankruptcy;
- third parties; and
- regulatory authorities.

\textbf{14.1 Regulatory authorities}

The main regulatory authorities responsible for governing Australia’s corporate sector are set out below.

\textbf{ASIC}

The Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) is a government body that enforces and regulates company and financial services laws through the general administration of the Corporations Act.

\textbf{ASX}

Alongside ASIC, the Australian Securities Exchange Limited (ASX) is responsible for the market regulation and compliance of Australia’s listed companies.

\textbf{ACCC}

The Australian Competition and Consumer Commission (ACCC) is charged with administering Australian competition regulation through the implementation of the \textit{Competition and Consumer Act 2010 (Cth)} (CCA).

\textbf{APRA}

\textsuperscript{14} ASIC’s Cyber resilience good practices
The Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) is the national regulator of the Australian financial services industry, supervising prudential institutions including deposit-takers (i.e. banks, building societies and credit unions), insurance companies and superannuation funds (other than self-managed superannuation funds).

14.2 Liability for involvement in a contravention

Where certain provisions of the Corporations Act (such as those discussed in sections 2, 3 and 6 above) are contravened, a director (or any other person) who is "involved" in the contravention may also be liable. A person is involved in a contravention if they aid, abet, counsel, procure or induce the contravention, are knowingly concerned in or party to the contravention, or conspire with others to effect the contravention.

Similarly, a director (or any other person) who aids, abets, counsels or procures the commission of any criminal offence is taken to have committed the same offence themselves.

14.3 Consequences of contravention

A director who breaches their duties or other obligations may be liable to suffer significant consequences, including:

- pecuniary penalties (fines);
- liability to compensate the company or others for loss suffered;
- liability to account to the company for profits made by the director; and
- disqualification from managing companies.

If a director's breach of duty constitutes an offence (which often, but not always, involves dishonesty), the director may also be liable for substantial criminal penalties (such as a term of imprisonment).

In civil proceedings only, the court has discretion to excuse a director from certain liabilities, if the director acted honestly and ought fairly to be excused for a contravention. Also, officers of listed entities will not contravene the civil penalty provisions of the Corporations Act if they can show that they took all reasonable steps in the circumstances to ensure that the entity complied with its obligations under the civil penalty provisions, and after doing so, believed on reasonable grounds that the entity was complying with its obligations.

The Court may also make a relinquishment order to neutralise any financial benefit that might have been gained from misconduct. Further, in making a pecuniary order, relinquishment order or imposing a fine, the Court must give priority to the compensation of victims.

14.4 Penalties under the Corporations Act

The maximum penalties, for offences committed on or after 1 July 2020, are:

- for criminal offences, 15 years' imprisonment and/or a fine the greater of:
  - $999,000 for an individual or $9.99 million for a body corporate;
  - three times the benefit gained and detriment avoided by the offence; or
  - for a body corporate, 10% of its annual turnover; and
- for civil breaches, a pecuniary penalty the greater of:
  - $1.11 million for an individual or $11.1 million for a body corporate;
  - three times the benefit gained and detriment avoided by the breach; or
15. Corporate governance

15.1 ASIC’s Corporate Plan for 2021 to 2025

In its Corporate Plan for 2021 to 2025, ASIC set out its mandate to support Australia’s economic recovery in the post-pandemic world, making clear that it will be taking greater action against the failure of boards to manage non-financial risk, with a focus on the individual conduct of directors. It will be focussing its regulatory and enforcement strategy on four key pillars:

- promoting economic recovery, including through facilitating innovation;
- reducing risk of harm to consumers exposed to poor product governance and design, and increasing scrutiny over scam activity;
- supporting enhanced cyber resilience and cyber security among regulated entities; and
- driving industry readiness and compliance with standards set by law reform initiatives (including the Financial Accountability Regime, reforms in superannuation and insurance, breach reporting, and the design and distribution obligations).

In its Future of the Board report, the Governance Institute confirmed that boards are set to come under greater scrutiny in the coming years, with higher expectations placed on directors to lead the way in terms of social and ethical matters.

15.2 ASX Corporate Governance Principles and Recommendations

The ASX Corporate Governance Council’s Corporate Governance Principles and Recommendations (Principles and Recommendations) highlights the importance for directors and officers to monitor and take responsibility for culture, conduct and behaviour within companies, and an increased need for boards to engage with senior management on non-financial (as well as financial) risks. While the Principles and Recommendation are applicable to listed entities only, they are considered to be a benchmark for corporate governance in Australia generally, and should also be reflected in the corporate governance practices of non-listed entities.

15.3 ASIC Corporate Governance Report

Similar to the Principles and Recommendations as mentioned above, ASIC’s Corporate Governance Taskforce Report urges directors and officers to focus on overseeing and managing compliance risk, and implement better information flow between directors, senior management and risk committees. This places a higher onus on directors to be pro-active in assessing and holding management accountable for non-financial risks (such as operational, conduct and compliance risks), in addition to directors’ customary focus on financial risks.

15.4 ASIC’s enforcement powers

The Royal Commission into Misconduct in the Banking, Superannuation and Financial Services Industry (Royal Commission) triggered a wide-spread toughening of approach by regulators to corporate governance and contravention in Australia. In response to recommendations made by the Royal Commission, ASIC established an internal “Office of Enforcement”, which has a broad range of enforcement powers aimed at the deterrence and punishment of wrongdoing in a targeted and proportionate way. ASIC’s range of enforcement

---

16 Future of the board (Governance Institute.)
17 ASIC’s Corporate Governance Taskforce Report
18 Royal Commission into Misconduct in the Banking, Superannuation and Financial Services Industry powers include issuing infringement notices, negotiating enforceable undertakings and initiating civil and criminal proceedings.

16. Directors' insurance and indemnities

A director may be insured and/or indemnified against liabilities they may incur as a director, subject to a number of restrictions outlined below.

In addition, a company or a related company must not exempt a person from a liability to the company incurred as a director of the company.

16.1 Restrictions on indemnifying directors

Indemnities for liabilities other than legal costs

A company or a related company must not indemnify a person against any of the following liabilities incurred as a director of the company:

- a liability owed to the company or a related company;
- a liability to pay a pecuniary penalty or compensation ordered under the Corporations Act; or
- a liability that did not arise out of conduct in good faith.

These restrictions do not apply to indemnities for legal costs, which are restricted as set out below.

Indemnities for legal costs

A company or a related company must not indemnify a person against legal costs incurred in defending an action for a liability incurred as a director of the company if:

- the director is found to have a liability for which the company may not indemnify them, as outlined above;
- the director is found guilty in criminal proceedings;
- the proceedings are brought by ASIC or a liquidator and the grounds for making the order sought are established; or
- the costs are incurred in connection with proceedings for relief to the director under the Corporations Act and the relief is not granted.

16.2 Restrictions on insuring directors

A company or a related company must not pay a premium for a contract insuring a present or former director of the company against a liability (other than for legal costs) arising out of:

- conduct involving a wilful breach of duty in relation to the company; or
- a breach of the duties not to improperly use their position or information.

17. Other sources of liability

In addition to the potential liabilities under the Corporations Act and common law summarised above, directors may incur liabilities under various other laws. Key laws are outlined below but this is not an exhaustive summary.
17.1 Anti-bribery and corruption legislation

Australia has anti-bribery laws at Commonwealth, state and territory levels, governing bribery offences relating to Commonwealth public officials, foreign public officials, and commercial or private bribery.

Directors can be personally liable for directly or indirectly giving or receiving a bribe, or if they are involved in the bribery, they may have accessorial liability. This can result in fines or imprisonment. In addition, if a director authorises a bribe then this could result in significant financial penalties for a company.

ASIC, Australia’s main corporate regulator, can be involved in investigations into corrupt conduct where an Australian corporation is involved - particularly in relation to associated offences in relation to the books and records of the company or in relation to directors’ duties. Directors have been liable for breaching their directors duties in circumstances where they “failed to join the dots” and identify corrupt conduct occurring within the company.

Baker McKenzie recommends that corporations adopt a compliance program to discourage and prevent bribery and corruption within their organisation. This program should be tailored to the corporation’s geographical and operational risks, and directors should ensure that it is comprehensively and continually communicated, monitored and enforced. Directors should ensure that they receive regular reports in relation to the implementation of the compliance program and information in relation to any evidence of such conduct.

17.2 Taxation laws

Complicity in taxation offences

If a company commits a taxation offence, the directors who are concerned in, or take part in, the management of the company are deemed to have committed the same offence.

It is a defence if the director proves that they:

■ did not aid, abet, counsel or procure the commission of the offence; or
■ were not knowingly concerned in, or a party to, the commission of the offence.

Unremitted taxation and superannuation amounts - personal liability

Very broadly, directors are personally liable for any:

■ pay as you go (PAYG) withholding amounts that are not remitted to the Commissioner of Taxation;
■ superannuation contributions not made;
■ goods and services tax (GST) liabilities or instalments of the company; and
■ excise tax and wine equalisation tax,

unless the company:

■ pays the amount in question;
■ enters into an instalment arrangement with the Commissioner to remit the amounts;
■ goes into voluntary administration (where an administrator of the company is appointed under section 436A, 436B or 436C of the Corporations Act); or
■ begins to be wound up.
These penalties may also apply to new directors who become directors after the due date for the amounts. New directors can incur a director penalty for the outstanding liabilities if they have not discharged the obligation (by payment, appointment of administrator or winding up) within 30 days of becoming a director.

Generally, it is a defence if a director can prove that:

- they did not take part in managing the company during the relevant time due to illness or some other reason, provided it would have been unreasonable to expect the director to take part, and the director did not take part, in the management of the company;
- either they took all reasonable steps to ensure that the company complied with its obligation, caused an administrator of the company to be appointed, the directors caused the company to begin to be wound up, or there were no reasonable steps that could have been taken to ensure that any of these things happened; or
- to the extent the penalty resulted from the company treating the Superannuation Guarantee (Administration) Act 1992 (Cth) or the A New Tax System (Goods and Services Tax) Act 1999 (Cth), as applying to a matter in a particular way that was reasonably arguable, if the company took reasonable care in connection with applying the relevant legislation to the matter.

17.3 Competition and consumer laws

Directors may be liable for any personal contraventions of the CCA or Schedule 2 of the CCA (ACL), for example by engaging in misleading or deceptive conduct.

In addition, if a company breaches the CCA or ACL, any director (or other person) who was "involved" in the contravention may also be liable. A director is involved in a contravention if they aid, abet, counsel, procure, induce (or attempt to induce), are in any way knowingly concerned in or party to, or conspire with others to effect, the contravention.

A director who commits or is involved in a contravention may incur significant pecuniary penalties, liability to compensate others for loss suffered as a result of the contravention and, in the case of the prohibition on cartel conduct, substantial criminal penalties (up to 10 years’ imprisonment). A director may also be disqualified from managing a corporation.

A company is prohibited from indemnifying a director for liability to pay a pecuniary penalty for breach of the CCA or ACL, or for legal costs incurred in proceedings in which they are found liable to pay such a pecuniary penalty.

17.4 Environmental legislative reform

In Australia environmental legislation and regulation operates at a Federal, State and Territory level.

In 2022, NSW Parliament passed the Environmental Legislation Amendment Bill 2022 which amended seven key pieces of environmental legislation. The Bill expanded the liability and penalties that the Environment Protection Authority (EPA) can impose on corporations, directors and related bodies for the commission of environmental offences, both financially and criminally.

The maximum financial penalties imposed on individuals has now risen to $500,000 for failing to comply with environmental orders and $250,000 for giving false or misleading information. As an alternative to, or in addition to, the maximum monetary penalty, individuals can also be imprisoned for up to 18 months for making false or misleading statements in reports, and up to two years for repeat waste offences. Additionally, the Bill also expands the offence of providing false and misleading information by including situations where it was provided unknowingly.

The Bill broadens the definition of a ‘fit and proper person’, entitling appropriate regulatory authorities to determine whether a director of a corporation is a ‘fit and proper person’ based on whether current and former directors of the corporation and related bodies have contravened environmental protection legislation. Finally, the Bill also widens the EPA’s powers, giving them the authority to issue clean-up, prevention and prohibition notices for corporate environmental breaches. The imposition of stricter environmental obligations for corporations and directors will likely be the subject of further reforms for other States and Territories as Commonwealth and State governments have committed to achieving net zero emissions by 2050. Similarly, the number of large Australian companies making net zero commitments has also risen. These net zero pledges, if unsubstantiated, may attract risk of personal liability for directors as acts of misleading and deceptive conduct under Australian Consumer Law.

It is important for directors to comply with new legislation and industry standards by ensuring proper strategies and implementation measures are in place. The recent scrutiny of climate-related disclosures and greenwashing further highlights the need for directors to embed climate action as a core focus for their organisation.

17.5 Employment legislation

Directors can incur personal liability for their companies’ breaches of some employment laws.

Under the Fair Work Act 2009 (Cth) (Australia’s national employment legislation) a director who was “involved in” a contravention of a “civil remedy provision” of that Act (most of the important provisions of that Act are civil remedy provisions) is deemed to have personally contravened that provision. This can happen if the director aided or abetted the contravention, induced the contravention, conspired with others to effect the contravention, or was "knowingly concerned in" the contravention.

Higher penalties apply where the company commits a serious contravention (that is, the provision was knowingly contravened and as part of a systematic pattern of conduct), and the director knew the company's contravention was a serious contravention.

Additionally, under Victorian “wage theft” laws (which came into operation on 1 July 2021) directors are deemed to have committed an “employee entitlement offence” if their company has done so. In those circumstances, the onus will then fall on the director to show that he/she exercised due diligence to prevent the occurrence of the offence. A director can still be prosecuted and found guilty even if the company is not.

Queensland has also amended its criminal code to include “wage theft” as a type of stealing. A director who aids the committing of an offence or counsels or procures a person to commit an offence will be taken to have committed the offence.

17.6 Anti-discrimination legislation

Commonwealth, state and territory legislation prohibit discrimination in the workplace and in the provision of goods and services on various grounds. These grounds include age, disability, union activity, pregnancy, race, sex and sexual orientation. These laws also prohibit sexual harassment and, in some cases, other forms of harassment and conduct likely to humiliate or intimidate.

Directors may be held personally liable under such laws if they engage in discriminatory conduct or request, induce, instruct, encourage, authorise, or assist another person to commit a discriminatory or unlawful act.

The Fair Work Act 2009 (Cth) also prohibits the taking of adverse action against an employee (or prospective employee) of the basis of their race, colour, sex, sexual orientation, age, physical or mental disability, marital status, family or carer’s responsibilities, pregnancy, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin. This is a civil remedy provision, so a director will be taken to have contravened the provision if they aided or abetted the contravention, induced the contravention, conspired with others to effect the contravention, or was "knowingly concerned in" the contravention.
17.7 Workplace health and safety

A company which conducts business activities or undertakings in Australia, including engaging employees and contractors, has obligations under work health and safety legislation in each State and Territory. These obligations extend to workers, contractors, sub-contractors, employees of contractors, visitors, customers and any other person affected by the business activities or undertakings conducted by the company.

Directors can also be personally liable for offences under work health and safety legislation. Uniform work health and safety legislation in most States and Territories imposes positive obligations on each director and company officer to exercise due diligence to ensure the company complies with its work health and safety obligations.

Substantial penalties are imposed on companies and individuals for breach of work health and safety legislation. An individual director, officer or employee may also be imprisoned for up to five years for reckless conduct under work health and safety legislation.

Additionally, a number of States and Territories have recently introduced industrial or workplace manslaughter laws. The detail of these laws varies from place to place. In Victoria, a director who by negligent conduct causes the death of a person who is owed a duty under workplace safety legislation can, in some circumstances, be prosecuted and, if convicted, jailed for up to 25 years.
Baker McKenzie helps clients overcome the challenges of competing in the global economy.

We solve complex legal problems across borders and practice areas. Our unique culture, developed over 70 years, enables our 13,000 people to understand local markets and navigate multiple jurisdictions, working together as trusted colleagues and friends to instil confidence in our clients.

www.bakermckenzie.com